The GIPC is run by INSOL International in conjunction with a range of distinguished presenters from across the world including professors and lecturers from leading universities and institutions and partners from major professional firms. The GIPC is a postgraduate certification programme with duration of approximately nine months and formed of three modules. The programme is the result of INSOL International’s strong relationships with academics from many countries all of whom specialise in international and comparative insolvency law.

INSOL International is offering a Bursary to enable a judge from an emerging country to participate in the 2018 / 2019 GIPC. The bursary has been named the Professor Ronald W Harmer Bursary to mark the enormous contribution made by Ron to academic learning in international and comparative insolvency law, most recently as a Professor at University College London, where he worked with Professor Ian Fletcher.

Core and Course Committees

The GIPC is monitored and administered by a course administrator, a Core Committee and a wider advisory Course Committee. Members of the committees include professors and key industry professionals, details and bios of whom are listed on our web site. They review applications to take the course and for the Bursary.

The Course

The course is comprised of three modules. To enable participants to experience a stimulating learning environment, Module A of the programme is held in one of the cities where the universities are located. Module B is organised to coincide with one of INSOL’s annual conferences. So, besides participating in Module B, students will be able to attend the INSOL conference - a further valuable learning experience. Module C is carried out online and involves a virtual restructuring including a video conference court hearing with judges from the English High Court and the US Bankruptcy Court.
